Tornado shelters face dilemma with pet lovers

Don't be confused with Paul, the hairless dog who lives in the dog house in the back yard of the home in the photo above. The dog house is in the back yard of the home in the photo above. The dog house is in the back yard of the home in the photo above.

LAWRENCE—The problem with tornado shelters is not that they are expensive, but that they are not pet-friendly. Many pet owners are reluctant to leave their animals in a shelter during a storm, and this has led to a dilemma for many families. Some are choosing to build shelters that are not certified, while others are looking for ways to protect their pets during emergencies.

2 men drop their federal lawsuit over Kansas voter ID law

WICHITA—Two federal judges have dismissed a lawsuit filed by two men challenging the state's voter ID law. The men, who had argued that the law violated their constitutional rights, have now agreed to drop their case. The court's decision is a significant victory for the state's efforts to implement the law.
