Report: Thousands of convicted criminals freed while awaiting deportation proceedings
A report released by the U.S. Department of Justice's Office of Inspector General (OIG) has found that thousands of convicted criminals are being released from federal custody while awaiting deportation proceedings. The report, titled "Convicted Criminals Released While Awaiting Deportation Proceedings," was released in March 2014. It found that between 2008 and 2012, approximately 10,000 convicted criminals were released from federal custody while awaiting deportation proceedings. The report also found that many of these individuals were released without any conditions of release, and that some were released to the community.
