Report: Thousands of convicted criminals freed while awaiting deportation proceedings
A report from the American Immigration Law Foundation (AILF) reveals that thousands of convicted criminals are being released from federal custody while awaiting deportation proceedings. The report states that the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) has a backlog of over 100,000 criminal cases, and that many of these cases are being closed without any action being taken. This has led to a significant number of individuals being released, some of whom are repeat offenders. The report calls for increased resources and faster processing times to address this issue.
