Voters again turn down Turpin school bond
By Bob White
Turpin voters have once again rejected a school bond issue. The bond issue was for $10 million and was intended to fund the construction of a new high school and the renovation of several elementary schools. The bond issue was approved by the school board in June, but voters rejected it at the August 19 election. The school board will meet again in September to discuss the bond issue and other options for funding school construction.
